Tempo is still in the works and will be a stablecoin and payments-focused L1 with Stripe essentially being in control of the network. Its ethos marks a stark contrast to Ethereum's decentralized and open-source nature, given that it will be a corporate-controlled chain.

The film uses the human angle to frame a debate that was prevalent at the time. When an attacker takes money from a smart contract, relying on the contract's internal logic to obtain tokens outside of the creator's intention, is that wrong? Should the attacker be censured, legally or otherwise, or is this simply fair play?

Lately, however, that decision has moved from tactical to strategic. Beyond developers deciding between ecosystems, big companies are now building their blockchains from scratch. And when the companies doing it are Stripe, Coinbase or other giants with deep regulatory and distribution advantages, the L1 stops being a neutral playing field and starts looking like a moat.
