Many happy South African families spent numerous hours in their faithful Nissan Livina X-Gear. Even though this model was discontinued during 2015, the Nissan stable still offers South African families all they are looking for in a safe, practical, efficient and in-true-Nissan style family vehicle. Why not have a look at the Nissan Magnite and the look of the X-Gear is pleasing to the eye and perfectly encapsulates the feeling of adventure that so many X-Gear drivers crave. In fact, the X-Gear is pleasing to the eye and even kitesurfing kits whenever you are ready to embrace a little weekend action. Do you want to leave the rat race behind? Then jump into a Nissan Livina X-Gear and get your adventure started! The Nissan Livina X-Gear is no longer sold new in South Africa, but you may find a quality used model for sale. Enjoy responsive acceleration and comfortable cruising thanks to the lively 1.6-litre Nissan developed engine in the X-Gear. This together with the smooth suspension, electric power steering and Brake Assist (Acenta + Only) ensure that you are ready for any challenge that South African roads might throw your way. ENGINE FUEL POWER TORQUE TRANSMISSION 1.6L Petrol 80 KW 153 Nm 5-speed manual Find out more about the Nissan X-Gear Engine Specs and a complete vehicle breakdown when you download the Nissan Livina X-Gear brochure on our site. Did you know? Technological improvements introduced into the X-Gear's engine by Nissan allow the engine to deliver heightened engine performance while improving fuel consumption levels. It also reduces mechanical friction between internal parts, which in turn means that there is less engine noise, vibration and harshness while driving. If you enjoy a good outdoor adventure with your family then we might just have a few Nissan Livina X-Gear accessories that you might want to add to your vehicle. They include: Leather Seating Gear Lock Audio - Clarion Carpet Sets Boot Carpet Mud Guards Boot Sill Protection Tow Bar Roof Load Bars Thanks to its practical design on both the inside and the outside, the Livina X-Gear is the perfect vehicle to add accessories to. Please contact us at one of our showrooms in the Eastern or Western Cape to find out more. Our Group1 Nissan vehicle team was sent to enjoy a bit of the Livina X-Factor when they reviewed the Livina X-Gear in Cape Town and Uitenhage. This was the result... The Nissan Livina might not be the prettiest car on the road, but if you have a family and like to get away from home over the weekends, then this could be the well priced multi-purpose vehicle (MPV) you have been looking for. Despite the utilitarian perception of the Nissan Livina range in South Africa, the new X-Gear has done something that even the Grand Livina never got right; it has added a much needed sense of style to this lifestyle Nissan model. In fact, with the X-Gear you get all the spacious practicality of the original Livina wrapped in SUV clothing. The X-Gear now features SUV trimmings such as roof rails, matt black fenders, door quard finishers and side sill protectors that upgrade the external look and feel of the X-Gear, putting it head and shoulders above its Livina and Grand Livina brethren in the looks department. The Nissan Livina X-Gear is the adventurer's companion, offering plenty of room for sporting paraphernalia, and of course a respectable fuel economy to boot. Practical outdoor adventure wagonPublished in Weekend Witness Motoring on Saturday June 9, 2012Person digs up some weird and wonderful information while researching test cars. For example, how many of you knew that the original Nissan Livina was developed in partnership with Nissan's Chinese subsidiary, Dongfeng Nissan Passenger Vehicle Company and launched at the Guangzhou International Motor Show in 2006? The X-Gear version was introduced in Indonesia during 2008 and arrived here in September of that year. It differs from plain Livinas in that it aims to appeal to youthful and adventurous souls looking for a vehicle to partner them in their outdoor pursuits. With strong SUV styling elements, it sets itself apart from the rest of the range with roof rails and bumpers provide a more aggressive stance. To complete the overall adventurous look, it is fitted with a set of stylish 15" alloy wheels. It is 95 mm longer than the standard car, as well as being 40 mm wider and taller as a result of the roof rails and wing extensions. Ground clearance remains the same, at 177 mm. Available in two levels of trim, Visia and Acenta Plus, the more upmarket model boasts a second airbag, body-coloured mirrors, ABS brakes with EBD and EBA, a six-CD music centre with six speakers, one sun visor mirror (left) and pockets behind the front seatbacks. Possibly disappointing its youthful target audience somewhat, no provision is made for accessory music storage devices, such as flash drives or iPods. The rear seats split 60:40 and the front passenger seat can be tilted to transport longer items like surf boards, wake boards or skis up to 2.40m long. Remaining practical, the luggage area measures 383 litres with back seats up and 769 with them folded. A spacesaver spare is stored in the usual place under the boot floor. The car pulls strongly with decent roll-on acceleration from cruising speed in fifth, gears are evenly spaced and the box shifts cleanly. Thanks to a generous view outward, the X-Gear is easy to park and manoeuvre. Even the SA Standard Tall Passenger declared himself well satisfied, awarding ten points each for head-, knee- and foot space. The official blurb boasts that: "The suspension system features struts in front and an H-shaped torsion beam layout at the rear with internal rebound springs and ripple-control shock absorbers," we took the X-Gear out onto a fairly nasty dirt road. They work well, providing possibly the most comfortable and stable dirt ride we have experienced on the budget side of a Discovery, in a long time. While this Livina does not differ significantly from its plain-Jane sisters, it looks more modern and with one or two reservations, should appeal to its target audience quite strongly. The

Today's review comes with some free advice: you should always mince your words because you might have to eat them later. Spread out in front of me and ready for some regurgitation are all the nasty things I may have recently said about our newest press demo, the Nissan Livina 1.6 Acenta. Chief among these were "tourist fodder", "blik met wiele" and "motorised" and "mot snooze fest" - all of which I presumptuously uttered before driving the white MPV. I hope everyone at Europear and the vivacious Nissan PR ladies will pardon my rude remarks about rentals; including their lovely Tiidas. You see, lurking beneath one of thee most uninspiring and bland exteriors is an incredible vehicle. Motoring scribes often detect patterns in cars and brands; and my overriding sensation with Nissans is that of being pleasantly surprised. I believe they call it "shift expectations". Yet again this is all a matter of opinion and you may indeed find the Livina to be a wheeled snore orgy, but most people will emerge from the dreary shape and dull interior with big eyes and bigger smiles. You expect a tedious commuter and get a lively surprise instead. Added to its humdrum shape and in my defence, it doesn't look very promising on paper. The Livina is 4.18m of Japanese monotony, fitted with five seats, small wheels, big windows and a deep boot. Its power comes from a 1.6L petrol four-cylinder with 80kW (109hp) or 153Nm Yawn. It's available in six variations: the standard shape, a longer "Grand Livina" and the tasty "Livina X-Gear", all available in two differing specification levels. Every model uses the puny little engine mentioned above and is exclusively available with a five-speed manual gearbox. The X-Gear is aimed at active urbanites who want to make darn sure they don't lose their car in a sea of Livinas at some wine farm on Sundays. The Grand Livina simply offers more space and seats (totalling seven) for shuttle operators and extended families. The base model is available in a very basic "Visia" specification for fleet owners. Compared to our "Acenta" model, it lacks a passenger airbag, ABS brakes, emergency brake-force distribution, brake assist, any sort of radio or clock, power mirrors, a service plan and some colour coding. That translates into a saving of N$172,000 over this Livina's N$172,000 price tag. Both models come standard with alarm/immobiliser, 60/40 folding rear bench, remote central locking, child lock, power steering, power windows, adjustable steering wheel, trip meter, air-con, 3-year/100,000 warranty and roadside assistance. The interior is a sea of acceptable fabrics, tolerable plastics and adequate panel gaps. The radio is a bit old-school but does as it's told and the ventilation controls couldn't be any simpler. The instruments are easy to read and most occupants can't complain about space except perhaps between the front two. Fire that laughable little motor up and it settles into a quiet, refined idle. Drive into town and it shows another Nissan trademark: absolute obedience and ease of use. The clutch, brake and accelerator respond well and are as light to operate as the steering. The gear lever can be a bit notchy but has a pleasing feel, visibility is good, the hooter sounds ridiculous and as a senior family member immediately pointed out after the second encounter with a speed bump: the Livina has a wonderfully smooth and soft suspension setup. Adopting the shape of the proverbial cherry on top, the engine presented the largest piece of humble pie I had on my plate and partly on my face. The power, noise and response from the 1,600 are unbelievably good; either Nissan has made a printing error in their brochures or they've built a fantastic little engine. Drop your right foot too fast and it will instantly burn rubber. Floor it while on the move and the little Jack Russell starts barking loudly and pulling vehemently on its leash. It's got plenty of torque to quietly cruise through town but many a shuttle driver will delight in the engine's willing nature when unleashed. It may lack fog lights and alloys but it makes up for this with character and lots of versatility. With 177mm of ground clearance, 383 to 769L of luggage capacity, no-nonsense technology and basic creature comforts, it's no wonder they're lined up at the airport. Expectation shifted. Edaran Tan Chong Motor (ETCM) officially unveiled the new Nissan Livina X-Gear yesterday, while also giving the media a chance to sample the new Nissan Livina X-Gear yesterday, while also giving the media a chance to sample the new Nissan Livina X-Gear yesterday, while also giving the media a chance to sample the new Nissan Livina X-Gear yesterday.
here to view it. In a nutshell, the X-Gear is a five-door version of the Grand Livina. Offered in a single spec - 1.6-litre auto - ETCM is pitching it as a spacious alternative to typical B-segment hatchbacks such as the Ford Fiesta, Mazda2, Honda Jazz and Suzuki Swift. Read the review after the jump. I started the first half of the journey from KL to Ipoh at the back seat. Headroom and legroom pic from yesterday's post was taken on the move - the driver was around my height (170-175 cm) and that was his correct driving position. Note that 'correct driving position. Note that 'correct driving position is backrest upright with elbows and knees slightly bent, not fully stretched, boy racer style. This is what we've learned from various driver training sessions by professionals, and not simply plucked from the sky. In any case, I'd say that legroom is very good in the X-Gear, and there's also room for feet to tuck below the front seat. One significant change in the cabin is the deletion of the rear air con vent of the Table 1.
supposed to direct air to the rearmost sections of the GL has also been omitted. This rationale for this is that the X-Gear's shorter cabin length doesn't require the GL's extra vents. Anyway, it's not a crime for a two-row car below RM100k to not have rear blowers, and I didn't miss them. After lunch in Ipoh, it was my turn behind the wheel. The driver's work area is instantly familiar, although things like the silver dial faces and black dashboard/interior (both introduced with the recently facelifted GL) lift the ambiance for yours truly. The headlining isn't in black, so it's not too dark. The 'Tartan' fabric works well to break the monotony. Things like seat height adjustment and steering reach adjustment/audio controls remain on the wish list, though. I also found the wing mirrors to be on the small side, but maybe it's just me. With 105 PS and no VVT, the engine looks poor on paper. The auto 'box is also just a four speeder. But the X-Gear driving experience is far from lethargic. A sensitive and responsive throttle plays its part, and the gearbox, while not possessing the silkiest change, is fault free in perceptiveness. If it doesn't compute, let's just say that sometimes bare figures don't tell the full story, and making the most of what you've got is important. For instance, I'd rather have the Vios' good response over the City's 11 PS, 4 Nm and extra gear ratio paper advantage. The X-Gear revs freely and willingly, but it does get quite vocal in the second half of the rev range. If you're wondering, the sound is more buzzy bee than sweet honey! So it's a good thing that the X-Gear is doing around 2,700 rpm at 110 km/h, which is logical since it's 105 kg lighter. I pushed hard between Jelapang and Sungai Perak since the won't be many curves after that stretch. The X-Gear's EPS steering is light and easy to steer, but not very grounded and assuring at high speeds (above our highway limit) and when overtaking trucks. A more planted feel for high speed cruising wouldn't go amiss, but bear in mind that we were driving way harder than most X-Gear owners will. Handling and grip wise, it doesn't fare too bad. The X-Gear is nimble when cornered hard, and held its line with determination in the S bends down the hill, despite the comfort biased Continental rubber. Carving corners isn't what it's made for, but given a choice between this and the (non Impul) Latio on B roads, I'll have the X-Gear, which is quite a surprising is the ride comfort on offer. Perhaps it's my bad memory, but I don't remember the Grand Livina riding so well. Bumps, potholes, ridges and bad roads were absorbed very well - no thumping and harsh landings, the well damped X-Gear didn't feel like a small Japanese car at all, to be honest! Definitely more compliant than the Latio, too. This quality makes the X-Gear didn't feel like a small Japanese car at all, to be honest! Definitely more compliant than the Latio, too. Livina. They are softer, since the X-Gear is a lighter car, and doesn't need to be tuned to accommodate the bigger loads of the GL. This doesn't need to be tuned to accommodate the bigger loads of the GL. This doesn't need to be tuned to accommodate the bigger loads of the GL. This is no flash in the pan actually; the X-Trail is one of the better riding SUVs in its class. To sum it up, the good ride comfort and easily accessible performance are big plus points for the X-Gear, along with the generous rear legroom and boot volume. It's not the best equipped car around, though, and keen drivers are much better served in a Fiesta or Swift. However, those cars don't double up as family transport very well, something the X-Gear excels in. Can't have it all, so it all depends on one's priorities. The X-Gear will never outsell the Grand Livina, but is sure to give B-segment car buyers some good food for thought. Looking to sell your car? Sell it with Carro. CVTC (Continuously Variable-valve Timing Control) & Drive-by-Wire technology. (cc) 1,598 Interesting highlight here. But d X-Gear does have d same output as d 1.6L GL though. Anyway, there isnt much difference in terms of output Latio 1.6 80kW/6000rpm vs X-Gear 77kW/5200rpmLatio 1.6 153Nm/4400rpm vs 150Nm/4400rpm Had a short run d X-Gear does have d same output as d 1.6L GL though.
Gear last wknd. Overall its a bit nippier than d 1.6GL (weight n length difference) while compared to its competitors n other crossovers, d interior is noticeable bigger in terms of passenger n boot space. But still prefer SX4 hatch's sharper handling even if it is more cramped. Like Quote Reply finkl Sep 24 2011, 11:28 AM Show posts by this member occasion, I don't really have 4 occupant driving 85%, which is still ok. However, there is the 4 gear ratio shifting smoothness and the sound proofing that might worry me....I will need to get some time to test drive this car...Not sure if they have a manual variant...hmmm...This post has been edited by finkl1: Sep 24 2011, 11:28 AM Like Quote Reply

If you load and unload stuff, there is a good chance of scratching the boot sill. Need to put a sill protector garnish on it. Another way to make. More money for the accessories. Do not know why this was removed as the rear boot sill was well protected in the Grand Livina. Like Quote Reply edthrax Nov 8 2011, 12:26 AM Show posts by this member only | Post #38 Enthusiast I'm an owner of the X-gear.. been driving this car for 3 weeks now.. I had 3 test drive session before i made the purchase. 1st test drive was by myself and the SA. 2nd was with my wife, her bro and the SA just to test the full load 4 passengers performance, 3rd test drive just to confirm this is the car to buy.. huhu..Its a nice car to drive, engine is good, never felt underpowered and the gear change is smooth. I've driven up to 160km/h and i can tell u that it is stable in straight line and it didn't struggle to get to that speed. engine is very quite during idle. in terms of handling, it can take corners very well. surprisingly the suspension and absorber is very good. it absorb alot of the road bumps. Fuel consumption varies depends on how heavy is the foot. i tend to push the car since i like the acceleration it gives. the best i got for mix highway and town driving is 480km for a 40L fill up. the worst i got was 400km for 40L fill up.the only complaint i have is the tyre looks abit thin. they should give atleast 195 tyres not 185. another plus point, it shares the same parts and accessories as the grand livina, so quite easy to find stuff for this car. Seems like your gf X-Gear 1st time mileage is identical to mine.
However, we need to do few more measurements to know its actual FC. What I dislike the car is very basic interior and not attracting enough. I was told this could turn out be our advantage in longer run as simple means lower maintenance is needed. The fabric of the seats are rough to the feeling too. However, the car handling and ability to absorb bumps or road holes has surprised me the most. This in turn gives a very nice comfortable ride, just like driving a C-segment saloon car This post has been edited by mikapoh: May 25 2012, 01:16 PM Like Quote Reply lcmbryan May 25 2012, 01:07

TRD or Kia Forte. However, taking into consideration this car is crossover, much more spacious, very comfortable ride than the 2s and for my small family, I decided to choose this car instead. For youngsters, I think Vios and Forte will appeal more Like Quote Reply theanswer May 26 2012, 12:33 AM Show posts by this member only | Post #87 reflect the true pic by doing the comparison. First, your route and traffic conditions are different each day. Unless you are driving the same roads, same traffic, cruising the same speed then it will be more precise which we know is impossible! after the service !The SC adviser also told me dun accelerate my car first even after 1k, better only do it after 10k service, i see their application only involve pillars, never say anything about the door. i see various packages offered from basic to luxury. can you ask your friend to confirm confirm what's the meaning of 'whole car'? is it luxury package? let us know more about it.. i'm using that dvd player and bear in mind if they offer you the model vx6266, that is not clarion. that's just simply a no brand player made in china. it's almost similar to clarion vx401a though. you can watch vcd, dvd, listen to radio, bluetooth your phone and listen to music (but volume very good), touch screen, connect to usb watch avi movie file. the reverse camera also not to say very accurate but at least better than nothing, can see if there are cats or dogs sleeping behind car before you reverse and accidentally flatten them. actually why cannot accelerate ah? i also wonder why cannot. the most famous advise is ask us not to drive to genting when you get new car. why? i thought all these engine already tested (run to the peak rpm) in the assembly plant? maybe someone can help us to bust this myth... #178 New Member Bear in mind coz when we use the autofoam actually it will increase weight of our car.so better find out first with them on how to do it whether it is full body or only for doors... Ye experience this autofoam before when my friend install it for myvi, surely weight of our will be increase a bit... And it also for sure effect other things.

But to me, if my car is new I am very reluctant to let them install the autofoam. As you know even after careful dismantling the internal parts, there is no guarantee that they will fit as tight as originally. Maybe for doors frame are still ok. I dont dare to take the risk and find out later there are many rattling sound from here and there. About acceleration on new car, it is always advisable not to rave it hard for 1st 5000km. This is to let the new engines and other mechanical moving parts to properly loosen up. I find 10,000km to run-in is ridiculously over-stated. Another thing beside hard acceleration is try not to immediately switch on the air-con especially during morning start-up. Let the engine warms for 1~2 mins to get its driving temp before attempt to switch the air-cond. Your engine will be glad to you if you do this. Added on June 21, 2012, 11:11 PM Like Quote Reply raymondevil Jun 21 2012, 11:20 PM Show posts by this member only | Post

New Member Chris, I manage to get some response from Desmond autofoam regarding on our noise problem. this is what he quoted...1) Outside Noisea) 3M Door seals (for high frequency noise)...280a) STP Door panel treatment for mid frequency noise and the solid Conti door feel ..480 2) To improve Ride Comfort, Handling, Engine, Uneven and rough road noise. Auto FOAM COMFORT for complete Undercarriage plus engine frames... 980.3) Engine Noise This our speciality. Very hard to get it right here, so i am very proud of this So proud, i can let you Test First before you buy!!! .... 250. When you want to splurge some cash on this? Post #193 Getting Started Hey guys. Ask about some opinion. Compare XG to Alza, which one is more economy FC? more ride comfort? planning to go show room to see one tomorrow Like Quote Reply mikapoh Jun 23 2012, 01:25 AM)Hey guys. Ask about some opinion. Compare XG to Alza, which one is more spacious? more economy FC? more ride comfort? planning to go show room to see one tomorrow I believe Alza is more spacious because it is MPV, X-Gear is a crossover, different category. Not too sure FC for Alza but will not be fuel efficient as the car is very bulky. For ride comfort, I certainly cast my vote to X-Gear. It is also one of its strong points. In the end, you still have to go and test drive to make your decision. Lets us know! I will summarize as Space vs Versatility to choose, other than P vs N Like Quote Reply faeezalias Jun 23 2012, 11:11 AM Show posts by this member only | Post #195 New Member experience...not good in FC, drained battery very fast, car seats noisy (even proton saga better than this), sound proof bad, highly unstable in high speed. posts by this member only | Post #363 Getting Started Now 2020, I've been driving this car for almost 7 years. Here's my thought: Pros: Good handlingQuite comfortNever have major problem except wear & tearFC is reasonable. Pump rm40 can run up to 330kmResponsive engineCons: Parts are quite pricey as I still send the car to SCS imple, lack of modern featuresNvh isn't the bestBottom line: The car is great for me to use for work and sometimes long distance journey. Giving me no headache. Very reliable. It's simple no frills car but it means easy to maintain. Less electronics means cheaper to maintain in the long run. The drawback is that the NVH should be better. The spare parts are relatively expensive compared to toyota. putra23 and Jessieccy liked this post Like Quote Reply « Next Oldest · The Farious · Next Newest » All Rights Reserved © 2002- 2025 Vijandren Ramadass (~unite against racism~) MPV model from Nissan This article needs additional citations for verification. 1,240 kg (2,690-2,734 lb)[28] The second-generation Livina was launched in Indonesia on February 19, 2019, a month after Nissan ceased the production of the L11 Grand Livina in the country.[29][30] A byproduct of Renault-Nissan-Mitsubishi Alliance,[31][32][33] it is a rebadged and restyled variant of the Mitsubishi Xpander and manufactured alongside it by Mitsubishi Motors plant in Cikarang, West Java.[34] Nissan used the "Livina" name for this model due to the established nameplate usage in the country. As it is based on the Xpander, it is only offered in one body variant and has crossover SUV-like proportions compared to previous generation's low slung station wagon-like proportions. [35] Compared to the Xpander, Nissan has redesigned several body panels including the Nissan's V-Motion grille, headlights, front bumper, rear tailgate metal sheet casing and taillight internals. The second-generation Livina is available in four grade levels: E, EL, VE and VL. In June 2020, the Sporty Package for the VE grade was made available in 100 units.[36] The E grade was discontinued in 2021.[citation needed] The second-generation Livina VL (ND1W, Indonesia) 2021 Livina VL (ND1W, Indonesia)
